Future of Farming

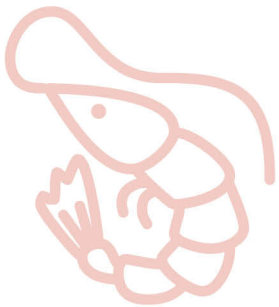

We're highlighting four youthful groups forging a positive impact into today's and tomorrow's food culture. They are the now; they are the future. They are working to develop a more sustainable future.

Paramount Schools Farm | Artisan Cheese

Middle-school students at Paramount Schools of Excellence in Indianapolis are getting a unique, hands-on entrepreneurial opportunity. The mayor-sponsored charter school has turned an acre of its campus into a dairy farm. With the help of school staff, the students are running a licensed dairy operation and hub for artisan cheeses. The students make an aged goat cheese and ricotta, which is featured at various high-profile restaurants, markets and bistros throughout the state. To learn more about their annual TURN Festival (Transforming URban Neighborhoods), which aims to support urban sustainability, visit TurnFestival.com or attend the festival on September 28, 2019.

Star Academy Fisheries | Urban Aquaculture

Star Academy offers a great hands-on learning opportunity for Arsenal Technical High School students. The fishery has been in full operation since last November. The shrimp thrive in two 500-gallon tanks. The water is filtered with a biofiltration system and relies solely on gravity to constantly circulate 1,000 gallons of water evenly. Students quickly realize the importance of biology, chemistry and water quality with this experience. Water-quality data is collected from the tanks by taking water samples. The temperatures and pH levels are analyzed daily and these readings are vital as they can change in a heartbeat. Just one inaccurate measurement could be enough to cause the loss of an entire crop of shrimp that the students worked so hard to raise. To learn more contact Sonya Lord-Chamberlain - lords@myips.org.

The Bee Corp | Bees and Pollination

The Bee Corp's product, Verifli applies data analytics to beehives to help growers ensure effective pollination through infrared inspection technology. The Bee Corp increases yield for farmers by monitoring the number, health and distribution of pollinating bees. This company is bringing technology to an industry untouched by technology advancement by replacing hive inspections that are currently performed by hand to estimate colony size and set pollination contract prices. Based in Bloomington, the Bee Corp continues to develop technology that creates opportunities to increase the bee population, pollination and making it easier for people to have more control over pollinating their crops. Currently they are working with California almond growers to increase their crop success. To learn more visit TheBeeCorp.com.

NutraMaize | Agbio-science

Professor Torbert Rocheford of Purdue University developed his unique variety of more nutritious, better tasting, non-GMO orange corn as part of an effort to help alleviate malnutrition in Africa. By combining cutting edge technology and traditional natural selection methods, he was able to substantially increase the levels of carotenoids in his corn, the same kind of natural antioxidant pigments that give carrots their orange color and healthy reputation. Now, Professor Torbert has teamed up with his son to bring the benefits of orange corn to Americans, producing it right here in Indiana. - FARMING ISN'T JUST A BUSINESS -

It's a way of life.

It's a calling that holds an opportunity for people to change the culture of food and generate a more sustainable food system, one that goes beyond producing corn, soybeans, beef and pork. The future of food depends on our ability to address the concerns of food output while combining prudent technological advances with efforts to reduce and reverse the stress and harm done to the environment.

Our mission is to be a voice and an advocate for the local food system, literally from the ground up. We celebrate and bring to you our sixth annual Central Indiana Farm Market Guide, which is a hands-on resource for those interested in supporting local farms and farm markets and exploring some specialty growers and producers as well as leaders in the agbioscience industry.

Agbioscience is the sector where food, agriculture, science and technology all converge

Beth Bechdol

PRESIDENT AND CEO OF AGRINOVUS

Our Commitment to Local Foods in Indiana

From our produce department to Table, our in-store restaurant, we recognize the value of local food. We are committed to providing our customers and diners with the opportunity to support Indiana Grown local farmers, producers, artisans and makers through the food you buy, make and savor.

We work hard every day to discover and procure products from companies and people who care and are concerned about how the product is raised or produced and the effects it has on our environment. We are honored to partner with more than 50 local vendors from Bettini Pasta to Smoking Goose, HoneyCreek Legacy meats to Peaper Brothers turnips, Hotel Tango Whiskey to Puerto Vallarta Mexican Ice Cream—all homegrown Indiana companies created within our community by people who care, like us, like you. Join us in our continued commitment to making a positive impact on your table and ours.
